at a small business event focused on collaboration opportunities with NASA.

NASA is hosting a free industry day on Friday, September 23, at The University of Scranton's DeNaples Center.

The event will bring together Pennsylvania companies, universities, and agency program representatives to discuss opportunities for the region to work with NASA. The event will provide attendees with information, resources, and networking with others in the industry.

Those interested in attending should register for the event and 1-on-1 networking in the afternoon, where participants will be paired with multiple "buyers" from government and industry that are relevant to their company's or university's offerings.

In-person attendance is recommended to allow networking that may result in new business and regional economic development. The morning portion of the event will be live streamed, while the afternoon sessions are only available to in-person attendees.
